266 BRONZE FIGURE OF AN ARCHER, FOUND IN LONDON.

The height of this important bronze statue, if standing erect, would be fifteen inches, but in its stooping posture its perpendicular height is about eleven inches; the breadth from the elbow of the right arm to the fore-finger of the left is ten inches. It represents an archer shooting an arrow from his bow; the bow and arrow were probably of gold or silver, but no vestiges of them were discovered. The aperture for the bow is seen in the closed left hand which formerly clasped it, and the bent fingers of the right appear in the act of drawing the arrow to its full extent, previous to its evolution. The figure is perfect and in good preservation (an extremely rare occurrence), and the deep green patina which it has acquired by age adds much to its effect and beauty. The eyes are of silver, the hair disposed in graceful curls on the head, as well as on the chin and upper lip. The left hand which held the bow and sustained the arrow is so placed as to bring the latter on a level with the eye; the steadfast look and determined expression of the whole face is much heightened by the silver eyes. The head and body are inclined forward, and nearly the whole weight is supported by the left leg, which is firmly placed on the ground, while the right is bent and brought behind the other to steady the whole.

This bronze was discovered in the month of July 1842, while excavating for a sewer in Queen Street, Cheapside, at a depth of about twelve feet. A short distance from Watling Street, a fine piece of Roman wall running across the street was exposed to view, in a remarkably perfect condition, built of red tiles, in the usual solid and compact mortar, evidently the ruins of a large Roman dwelling. It was within a few feet of this wall that the figure was found, among a variety of other reliquiæ of the Roman æra.

Coins of Carausius and Allectus were also met with close beside it, consequently this bronze must have belonged to a period antecedent to these usurpers. It is probable this work of art, as well as the greater part of the statues which adorned the dwellings of the Romans in Britain, were brought from Greece or Rome; and although the Britons, from the long residence of their conquerors among them, might have arrived at some proficiency in the arts, still their best models were from the East, and we have no evidence to show they produced many original works themselves. Of the numerous statues which must have embellished the houses and temples of the Romans in this country, it is surprising how few have been preserved to our time; scarcely any remain; and even these are very much damaged and imperfect. The introduction of Christianity was followed by the destruction of almost all of them, as they were doubtless considered objects of idolatrous worship and Pagan remains, consequently wherever they were found they were mutilated or destroyed; and probably many were carried away by the Romans themselves at their departure.

MISCELLANEOUS.

633 STAINED GLASS.—AN ELABORATELY FINISHED STAINED GLASS WINDOW, containing eleven coats of arms of ancient Dutch glass, about the year 1600, some of them containing the rare and very curious MERCHANTS' MARKS, the whole neatly ornamented in quarries of Cathedral tinted glass, and surrounded by a purple border 5 feet 7 by 3 feet 4. 1

634 Two sitting Egyptian Figures, with two lines of hieroglyphics at the back, in calcareous stone . 1

635 A MARBLE HEADLESS STATUE, the drapery beautifully sculptured in a high style of GREEK ART; found at Rhodes 4 feet 4 inches high. 1

636 AN ANCIENT GREEK INSCRIPTION, ON BLACK MARBLE; from the collection of Dr. Adam Clarke 17 inches by 10. 1

 This inscription is unfortunately imperfect, but it is a curious relic, and of great antiquity.

637 A VERY CURIOUS AND INTERESTING PERSIAN INSCRIPTION, taken from Fort Amboor, when in the possession of Hyder Aly, on stone . 23 inches by 17. 1

 From Dr. Adam Clarke's collection. The inscription is in Persian, and at the foot are also sentences in the Tamul character. It appears to have been placed in the walls of the fortress, which it boasts was impregnable; and thus involuntarily bears the highest testimony to the prowess of the British troops who took it.
